Because you care

There is a special bond that exists between people and their pets. Many times the loss of a pet companion comes as a shock to those who shared in that life. A loss this significant can become one of the most devastating experiences we encounter in our lives, proven to be second only to death of a child.

Society has not allowed us to grieve the loss of a pet in the same way that we have been allowed to grieve other significant losses in our lives.

Today, however, that trend is changing and we are better aware of the strong bonds between families and their "4-legged kids."

Now more than ever, those experiencing the loss of a pet have many more options available to commemorating their life.

To help you work through this time, we have prepared this information as an outline to help make decisions that are right for you and your family. The choices you make can have a profound effect in the way in which your family deals with this loss.

Our caring staff will guide you in your needs, and address any concerns you may have.

Sincerely,
BILL and SHARON
